A year on the quay

Income, works and what comes next

The harbour district changed more in the last three years than in the thirty before them. Ferry passengers returned first, followed by the small workshops that had left when rents rose, and the co-operative now manages forty-one units along the quay.

Most of the year's spending went on the sea wall, which was finished two months early and under budget. The remainder paid for the new slipway, for training two apprentices, and for a reserve that now covers eleven months of running costs, the highest level since the co-operative was founded.

Most of the year's spending went on the sea wall, which was finished two months early and under budget. The remainder paid for the new slipway, for training two apprentices, and for a reserve that now covers eleven months of running costs, the highest level since the co-operative was founded.

The harbour district changed more in the last three years than in the thirty before them. Ferry passengers returned first, followed by the small workshops that had left when rents rose, and the co-operative now manages forty-one units along the quay.

Income by source

Source	2025 (€)	2026 (€)	Change
Quay rents	412,000	438,500	+6.4%
Ferry berths	96,400	128,200	+33.0%
Workshop leases	151,800	173,900	+14.6%
Grants	60,000	45,000	-25.0%
Total income	720,200	785,600	+9.1%

Looking ahead

The harbour district changed more in the last three years than in the thirty before them. Ferry passengers returned first, followed by the small workshops that had left when rents rose, and the co-operative now manages forty-one units along the quay.

Most of the year's spending went on the sea wall, which was finished two months early and under budget. The remainder paid for the new slipway, for training two apprentices, and for a reserve that now covers eleven months of running costs, the highest level since the co-operative was founded.